Cover: Incised petroglyph of antlered deer discovered in 1988 on a ledge on Grand Lake Stream, Washington County. The subject, technique and stylistic traits indicate that this was the work of Maine Indians around the middle of the 19th century. This and other figures on the ledge (see Article by Hedden) are evidence that the Algonkian shamanistic tradition associated with petroglyphs was still active among the Passamaquoddy until the modern settlement of the region in the 1870's.
